Charles Platter, Professor and Head of Classics

To: Franklin College Curriculum Committee

From: Charles Platter, Head
Department of Classics

Date: March 7, 2016

Subject: Degree Major Name Change and Degree Termination Request

In order to consolidate the two majors in the undergraduate A.B. program in the Department of Classics, the faculty propose that one of our majors (Classical Languages) be renamed as Classics, with five areas of emphasis: Classical Culture, Classical Culture – Classical Archaeology, Classical Languages – Greek, Classical Languages – Latin, and Classical Languages – Greek and Latin. If approved, this will be accompanied by a request to terminate our Classical Culture major (see below).

The proposed changes better reflect national norms for the preparation of students for post-graduate education and careers in Classics. They will also bring our undergraduate programs into alignment with our graduate programs of study.

Justification for Name Changes

The name changes submitted are necessary to describe adequately the diverse tracks that our discipline can take. Our department and discipline are both encompassed in the more widely used term Classics, a term that embraces our former degrees of Classical Culture, Greek, Latin, and indeed Classical Languages. We feel that the term Classics describes the broad nature of our discipline and at the same time fosters a closer identification with the department itself; therefore, we request that the new merged A.B. be called A.B. Classics.

Although our discipline enjoys a wide focus, we also would like to be able to indicate precisely what aspects of the discipline our students have focused upon in the pursuit of their degrees. For those of our students studying classical archaeology through the medium of the English language and desiring to use the lessons of antiquity in preparation for law school, for example, the name AOE Classical Culture–Classical Archaeology gives law school admissions officers a more precise designation of a student’s focus and preparation within the Classics degree. Similarly, for those of our students studying one or both of the classical languages and desiring to pursue an advanced degree in one or both of the classical languages or desiring to obtain a job teaching one or both of the classical languages, the names AOE Classical Languages–Greek, AOE Classical Languages–Latin, and AOE Classical Languages–Greek and Latin are critical for identifying a student’s focus and preparation within the Classics degree. Otherwise, these foci could only be determined exactly through counting of courses on the student’s transcript. One who is trained in Greek is not necessarily prepared to teach Latin and vice versa. One who is trained in both classical languages is prepared presumptively to pursue the Ph.D. in Classics. The name changes for these current AOE’s would present both prospective admissions officers and employers with more precise descriptions of our students’ qualifications and abilities.
